University of Guelph, Ontario, McLaughlin Library

This rare book at first glance does not appear to be a bagpipe music book however Volume II has a small number of ceol mor and ceol beag tunes and this warrants its inclusion in this Bibliography. The writer has never seen the book and was alerted to its significance by Roderick Cannon and Keith Sanger, Edinburgh.

Both volumes contain much information about Gaelic life and culture. Volume II Chapter IV contains information about the Highland bagpipe and its music.

The date of initial publication is a little confusing; the book in the MacLaughlin Library has the date August 1881 on the dedication page. Nowhere does it indicate that it is the first or subsequent edition. However, Keith Sanger has provided the following information:

I think I can explain the book's date question. It was primarily printed by subscription and there was then an advert in the Scottish Celtic Review for March 1881 which indicated that there would be a limited number available for general purchase. I think that the advert may have been intended to come out earlier but as the National Library (of Scotland) Catalog clearly gives the date of 1880, I suspect that those would be the early subscribers and the 1881 date comes from the small number sold after the advert.

This seems to make sense for there were other bagpipe music books published by subscription but a number of additional copies were made available for general sale.

In March 2011 an internet auction site sold a copy of this book and in the description suggested it was dated 1891. This may be a later edition but without a better description it is impossible to be sure. The book sold for $160-00 USD.

Thanks are extended to Alastair McIntyre and Electric Scotland.com for permission to include the book's details and images.
